It was a memorable and adventurous day for Jim. It was the last day of his training and he was lost on his way. His compass had broken when it fell out of his hands and hit the rocks. "My parents will be disappointed if I don't pass my training this time." Jim couldn't find the path to take to get back to camp. He saw some boys through the bushes. They were wearing the same troop number as Jim. "Yes! Along with them, I will get back to camp. No one will know I didn't take the right way, but what about the rocks?" he thought. He was supposed to return with seven rocks that Mr. Sims had left along the path. "I will just bring back any rocks I find," he thought. Jim picked up some rocks that looked a lot like the rocks Mr. Sims had shown them. "I'm here!" Jim shouted when he arrived. "Here are my rocks." Mr. Sims took the rocks and gave Jim a funny look. "These rocks don't have a green mark painted on them, Jim," he said.
