Penguins are extraordinary birds that cannot fly, yet they are excellent swimmers. Their wings have evolved into flippers, allowing them to glide swiftly through water as if they were flying beneath the sea. Penguins live in large colonies, which help them stay safe from predators and keep warm in freezing climates. They often huddle closely together, forming a moving “blanket” of black and white feathers. Surprisingly, penguins take turns standing on the outside of the huddle, so everyone gets a chance to stay warm in the middle. Their teamwork and discipline make them some of the most remarkable creatures.
