Riya was an ordinary student with an ordinary routine. Every morning, she walked to school with her heavy bag and lighter thoughts. One day, while waiting for the school bell, she noticed a new boy sitting alone near the gate. His uniform was neat, but his eyes looked nervous. Riya remembered her first day at school and how scared she had felt.

During lunch break, Riya walked up to him and smiled. She asked his name and shared her lunch with him. The boy slowly relaxed and began to talk. He told her that he had moved from another city and did not know anyone yet. Riya listened patiently and made him feel comfortable.

By the end of the day, the boy was smiling and laughing with other classmates. Riya felt happy, not because she had done something big, but because she had done something kind. She learned that small actions, like a smile or a simple conversation, can make a big difference in someone's life. Kindness does not need special occasions; it only needs a caring heart.
